We would like to inform that WEG electric motors, manufactured in Jaraguá do Sul, Brazil, are not designed to release substances and that their operation does not require people to intervene. When installed correctly, following the manuals and performed by a qualified professional, the motors do not expose the food and water sources to chemicals in concentrations higher than those defined in Proposition 65, thus do not require specific identification.

WEG will be attentive about any change in the directive to guarantee its products compliance.
